Morning Session—8:30am – 11:30am

Pivot Point Program - "Teaching With a Brain In Mind"
Presenter Jamie Jones

The purpose for this educational session is to gain an understanding of how the brain learns so that educators can implement teaching strategies that take advantage of students' natural learning ability, leading to greater ease and effectiveness of instruction and more motivated, self-directed learners. Teachers will gain a working understanding of the principles of brain-compatible learning; Link these principles to teaching strategies that result in higher levels of student success; Explain how the four brain functions of attention, memory, retention and transfer affect student learning in the classroom; and implement learning-centered instructional practices that work in concert with the four key brain functions in order to boost student interest, performance and learning.
